

Preparing Buyers for Financing

"There are some basic things your buyers are going to have to do to prepare for financing. These are: reduce their debt load by paying off revolving debt, improve their credit score, and raise the down payment. Your understanding of how to go about this will help; conveying that to your buyers will help a lot more. In addition, I'll add one more - there are programs out there whose sole purpose is helping first-time home buyers get into their first home. Knowing the programs that are available in your area and how to qualify for them will be a huge boon to your buyers-and your bottom line. Because I'm telling you-if you don't help them, someone else will.

"We're going to start by discussing first-time home buyer programs because they're a great opportunity for young people-people of any age, actually-to understand the home buying process and avail themselves of credits, discounted rates, down payment assistance, and other incentives to home ownership. There are also programs available for those who aren't buying their first home but need a little help for whatever reason. We'll touch on some of those too."

Keira was all ears. This was exactly the type of information she needed to help her clients! And what a great time to learn about it-at the start of her career. She looked around and noticed everyone in the room seemed to feel the same way. Notepads and pens at the ready, eyes staring straight ahead.
