

Activities Requiring a License in Michigan

Article 25 (§339.2501) of the Michigan Occupational Code lists activities that require a license. If you perform any of these activities for others for a fee, and you don't have a license, you're breaking the law!

- Offering or attempting to offer a property for sale (as a salesperson)
- Buying (offering to buy)
- Giving a market analysis (or offering to do so)
- Engaging in negotiations for exchange, mortgage, purchase, or sale of property
- Engaging in negotiations for construction
- Acting as a leasing agent (hired by another to find tenants)
- Acting as a property manager
- Engaging in negotiations for the exchange, purchase, or sale of a business
- Engaging in real estate as an owner, or as a principal vocation

Other items to note about license law in Michigan:

- While a broker can be a person or an entity, a salesperson can't. Michigan doesn't have license law provisions for a salesperson as an entity, so if you were thinking of being licensed in your company's name, think again.
- If employed by a licensed broker, a licensed salesperson can do much of the same work as a licensed broker.
